Organic Summit takes place during the Danish EU Presidency, co-hosted by a wide range of Danish stakeholders in close cooperation with the Danish Government. The Summit will explore how organic farming can expand and grow while ensuring a sufficient global food production - within the planetary boundaries.

One of the two ambassadors of the Organic Summit 2025 is Peter Sisseck, who is a winemaker and forester. Many will know him as the man behind the Spanish winery Dominio de Pingus, which produces some of the world's most sought-after wines. But he is also known for his work making wine production more sustainable.

Peter Sisseck is participating as an ambassador for the food industry and shares his motivation for taking part in Organic Summit 2025.

"As food producers, we have a great responsibility to consider how to develop sustainable solutions. We must see sustainability as a new opportunity rather than as a limitation for us to develop even better, high-quality products. OS25 is a unique opportunity to bring together companies and other stakeholders within organics, but also on the outside, to talk and act on how we take the step even further. I consider that as an investment in the future for all of us."
